While Mrs. Edwards was in the town one Saturday, she saw a crash in the street : two cars ran into each other. The drivers got out, and an argument arose between them, but then a policeman arrived. He asked the drivers what had happened, and then he turned to the crowd which had collected round and said, " Did anyone see the accident? " Several people said they had, and Mrs. Edwards was one of them. A week later she was asked whether she was willing to be a witness in a court case concerning the accident, and she said she was; and a month later, a lawyer was questioning her in the court. She began everything with, " I think that ..., " until the lawyer got angry and said, " You're not here to say what you think: you're here to say what you know." " I'm sorry," said Mrs. Edwards, " but I'm not a lawyer, so I can't say things without thinking."
